Lesson 5: The Adventure of the Mason (Pages 58–66)

Author: Washington Irving (1783–1859)

Story Synopsis:

- English Summary: In the ancient Spanish city of Granada, an honest but impoverished mason struggles to feed his family. One night, a tall, pale stranger knocks on his door and hires him for a secret task on the condition that he be blindfolded. Led through twisting alleys into a grand courtyard with an old Moorish fountain, the mason builds a concealed brick vault. Before sealing it, the stranger has him place two heavy sacks into the vault; to the mason's touch, the sacks feel not like corpses, but like heavy coins or gold. Paid generously with gold coins, he is guided back blindfolded and warned never to remove the blindfold until he reaches home. Years later, an elderly, tight-fisted landlord complains that his abandoned house is considered unlucky and haunted by the sound of clinking coins after an old miser died there without an heir. Recognizing the Moorish fountain in the courtyard as the exact site of his midnight work, the mason cunningly offers to live there rent-free in exchange for repairing the dilapidated property. The landlord agrees. The mason moves in, quietly retrieves the hidden gold from behind the vault, repairs the house, becomes one of the wealthiest and most respected citizens of Granada, and takes the secret of the hidden vault to his grave.

E. Answer the following questions in detail (Page 63):

Q1: Why did the stranger blindfold the mason before taking him to the secret place?

Answer: The stranger blindfolded the mason so that he could never discover the geographical location or route to the hidden property in Granada, thereby keeping the concealed vault and its treasure absolutely secure from theft or exposure.

Q2: How did the mason feel when he touched the sacks that looked like bodies?

Answer: The mason was initially terrified because he was told he was carrying corpses. However, upon lifting them, he noticed the unusual metallic weight and clinking feel, realizing they were actually heavy sacks loaded with gold coins rather than human bodies.

Q3: What made the mason believe that the old house was the same place he had visited before?

Answer: When the landlord walked him into the dusty, cobweb-covered courtyard, the mason saw the unique, dry Moorish fountain in the center, identical in shape, carving, and surrounding layout to the hall he had worked in years earlier.

Q4: How did the mason's life change after he moved into the old house?

Answer: His fortunes soared. While diligently repairing the house brick-by-brick, he accessed the secret vault and retrieved the gold coins. He bought neat clothes, provided nutritious food and education for his children, and lived in comfort and high social respect.

Q5: What moral does the story of the mason teach us?

Answer: The story teaches that honesty, patient diligence, and quiet discretion (the wisdom of knowing when to remain silent) yield far greater and more enduring rewards than greed and boastfulness.

F. Think and Answer (Page 63):

1. Why do you think the mason never revealed the secret of the hidden vault even to his own family? Do you believe silence can sometimes be wiser than sharing everything?

Answer: The mason kept silent because disclosing the vault could invite greed, legal disputes with the landlord, or public suspicion of stolen property. Yes, discreet silence is often wiser than loose talk because it protects one's family and preserves hard-earned peace.

2. The mason became rich but stayed honest and hardworking. Do you think a person's character should change when they gain wealth or success?

Answer: No, wealth should never corrupt one's moral values. The mason set an inspiring example by continuing his honest labour and using his wealth charitably without arrogance.

Lesson 6: The Train Saviours (Pages 67–78)

Author: E. Nesbit (Edith Nesbit, 1858–1924) — adapted from The Railway Children

Story Synopsis:

- English Summary: Three siblings—Bobbie (Roberta), Peter, and Phyllis—live near a railway line in the countryside. While on a walk towards the railway tunnel, they hear a sinister rustling sound on the steep wooded slope above the tracks. Suddenly, an enormous landslide occurs: rocks, loose earth, and large trees crash down, completely burying the railway line. Knowing that the 11:29 train is due in minutes and that running to the distant station in time is impossible, Peter devises a brilliant plan. Remembering that red signifies danger, they persuade the girls to take off their bright red flannel petticoats. Peter cuts them into six flags and fixes them onto wooden broomsticks and branches. Stationing themselves along the curve before the tunnel, the children wave their red flags frantically as the heavy express train roars towards them. Bobbie runs onto the tracks, waving her flag until the last second. The driver spots the red warning signals, engages the emergency brakes, and brings the train to a screeching halt just twenty yards before the heap of trees and rubble. The passengers and driver hail the brave children as heroes who saved hundreds of lives.

Lesson 7: The Happy Prince (Pages 84–93)

Author: Oscar Wilde (1854–1900)

Story Synopsis:

- English Summary: High above a European city stands the majestic, gilded statue of the Happy Prince, adorned with leaves of fine gold, two bright sapphires for eyes, and a rich red ruby glowing on his sword-hilt. In life, the Prince lived in the Palace of Sans-Souci where sorrow was forbidden. But now, raised on a tall column, he witnesses the misery, poverty, and disease of the common people and weeps bitterly. A little Swallow, en route to warm Egypt for the winter, stops between the Prince's feet to rest. Moved by the Prince's compassion, the Swallow agrees to stay night after night to act as his messenger. At the Prince's bidding, the bird plucks the ruby for a poor, exhausted seamstress nursing her feverish son, extracts one sapphire for a starving young playwright freezing in an attic, gives the other sapphire to a weeping little match-girl who dropped her matches in the gutter, and strips off the fine gold leaf-by-leaf to feed starving street children. Completely blind and stripped of his former splendor, the Prince is now accompanied by the Swallow, who refuses to abandon him even as winter sets in. Frozen by the bitter frost, the devoted bird kisses the Prince and drops dead at his feet; at that exact moment, the Prince's leaden heart snaps into two pieces. The next day, the vain Town Councillors pull down the dull, shabby statue and melt it in a furnace, throwing the lead heart onto a dustheap beside the dead bird. In heaven, God commands His angels to bring Him the two most precious things in the city; the angel returns with the broken leaden heart and the dead swallow. God declares: "You have chosen well, for in my garden of Paradise this little bird shall sing for evermore, and in my city of gold the Happy Prince shall praise me."
